Simple but satisfying breakout game. You can switch between using mouse or keyboard to control the paddle via the Settings screen.

I made it to Stage 4 on my first try at medium difficulty. There's 15 screens per stage and the final screen of the stage is a boss fight.

Power-ups are the standard in break out type games - large ball, laser paddle, large paddle, multi-ball, bumper guard, exploding ball,

Pretty much standard brick types too; standard, hardened, invulnerable, invisible, switches, moving bricks, ect.

All in all, it scratches the itch for a new variation of the standard break out game. And at the price, definitely worth it.. EDIT-12V8/2018 MOUSE CONTROL!!! Great addition, and adds much to play, game length, and ball control (or seems to for me. Especially improved by mouse control is ball aiming! Section on lack of mouse control removed.) Also, pressing ESC out of habit (to pause) no longer exits the game. (Perhaps the best sign of a good game is attentive developers. If so HA2 will do very well. Thank you!)

As a player who has an almost obsessive interest in the PONG, Breakout, Arkanoid genre of arcade game, Halloween Arkanoid 2 (HA2) was pretty much a certainty (at least at this very reasonable price.) While I've been playing such games since my Odyssey console in 1973 included a PONG game, I won't begin to say I'm proficient. But I can speak from more than four decades of intermittent experience.

Please keep in mind that what may be its biggest plus may also be its biggest (review) negative: 150 levels. I can't begin to comment on more than the first handful of levels within the first few hours of release, or the increasing originality of levels that a player would both hope for and assume. But since many aspects are almost certainly universal, many of them can be safely discussed. (And this review can be edited over time.)

Confusing to me is the purpose for the scoring available on each level. Perhaps this has meaning further on, but without leaderboards or any obvious use for scores (beyond a HIGHSCORE selection on the Main Menu, purpose for which is unclear...Grand Total perhaps?), it seems more reasonable to not assign values to blocks at all, since scoring seems to have little critical purpose, and only clearing the field seems to matter for level progression. (I hope to find myself corrected by developers, and perhaps have it also included within the game in some manner.)

What DOES HA2 offer? The paddle is able to extend all the way to, and even beyond the edge, and that's a feature I'd like to see more often. Another very nice feature is that pretty much any contact between paddle and ball will act to rebound the ball into play instead of a corner nick knocking the ball downward. And as mentioned above, there are enough powerups to virtually drown the average player. No, there is no clever or interesting backstory (nor is it practical to expect one at this price), and this player is certainly most curious as to just how far new ideas and concepts can expand in 150 levels. And it's also a strong feature that each level is individual, and only needs to be defeated once to remain unlocked forever as it unlocks the next level in sequence.

Is Halloween Arkanoid 2 for you? At this price, my personal choice is a resounding YES! However, I'm in the fortunate position to be able to buy pretty much as many of them as I wish (since none are expensive.). Most gamers do not have this freedom, and must be cautious in their choosing. With so many choices of this genre on Steam at approximately the same price range, I suspect the mouse issue will be a deal breaker for many.

Thank you.
